Reducing funding and oil production can indeed impact a country's ability to wage wars.

1. Economic Strain: Countries heavily reliant on oil exports for revenue may face economic difficulties if production is halted. This can limit their ability to finance military operations.

2. Resource Scarcity: Oil is a critical resource for military machinery and logistics. Reduced production can lead to shortages, hampering military capabilities.

3. Political Pressure: International sanctions or reduced funding can create internal political pressure, potentially leading to a shift in government priorities away from conflict.

However, it's important to note that the effectiveness of these measures can vary based on the country's resilience, alternative resources, and geopolitical alliances.
